

I am sincerely honored and grateful for the World Federation of Neuroradiological Societies (WFNRS) to award me with a travel grant to attend the 2025 annual meeting of the American Society of Neuroradiology (ASNR) in Philadelphia.

My first ever ASNR annual meeting, ASNR 2025, brought together leading minds of neuroradiology from across the globe. The educational sessions were outstanding, illuminating remarkable strides in the field of neuroradiology, addressing ground breaking research. I attended various intriguing sessions and acquired a lot of new concepts. The atmosphere throughout the meeting was intellectually invigorating. I was able to network with several professionals and trainees. I returned home with fresh ideas, potential collaborations and a deepened sense of purpose in my career.

I was thrilled for the opportunity to moderate a scientific session-my first time doing so on an international stage. It was both humbling and empowering to facilitate the session and engage with the presenters and audience. I was also inspired to submit my own research work for future meetings.

As a young professional in academic radiology, I was privileged to take part in the young professional mentoring session, where I connected with diverse group of well accomplished senior neuroradiologists working in academic radiology and many young professionals and trainees. The session provided a rare and valuable platform for open roundtable discussion about career development, challenges in early career and work-life integration. I gained insightful advice that I will carry forward as I continue to grow both as a clinician and academic scholar.

Receiving this grant was not only a practical support but also a vote of confidence in my potential in this field. I am immensely grateful for this opportunity.

Sincerely

Etsehiwot Demeke Debele, M.D. Consultant Neuroradiologist.
